

Ryan Lanyon is a Manager of Transportation Policy and Innovation at the City of Toronto. He has been working in urban transportation for 20 years, in the areas of policy development, demand management, operations and administration. Since 2016, he has served as the Chair of the Automated Vehicles Interdivisional Working Group for the City of Toronto and is currently leading the development of the City's first Automated Vehicles Tactical Plan.